Rachel Thorne Germond is probably Chicago's only true dance postmodernist, if you weigh on the side of the technical basis of her movement, which shies away from gratuitous virtuosity and history-laden formula. The choreographer, who splits her performing life between Chicago and NYC, is celebrating her fourth season as "RTG Dance" with "Fours," an evening of new works that free associate to the number four. Numerologists will delight in the arrangements of design and meaning that Germond reveals in this evening of quartets and solos. – Asimina Chremos
